DULLES' FAILURE IS LESSON FOR HAMILTON

Havana in English to North America 0300 GMT 1 August 1961--E

(Text) Washington, D.C.--The days of Allen W. Dulles as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, CIA, are about to reach an end. Official circles here stated that the partner of Kurt Schroeder will be succeeded by Fowler Hamilton, a lawyer from New York. Hamilton was legal adviser to the Department of Justice and acted as member of the group of Kennedy's advisers during the electoral campaign.

Dulles spent more than 45 million dollars in recruiting, training, and arming the mercenaries who invaded Cuba last April and who were defeated in less than 72 hours by the Cuban Rebel Army and the National Revolutionary Militia. Dulles performed his work as director of the CIA with unintelligent intelligence. Dulles, docile servant of the U.S. monopolies, (was mainly) responsible for the criminal attack against Cuba, for he earned a dismissal ticket. Let that be a lesson for his successor.
